Curvy Women

The Real Reason Why You Can't Resist Her Curves

It's no secret that dudes prefer curvy women. Seen in paintings by historic masters and pined for in modern song lyrics, feminine curves top most men's wish lists. Whether we're talking bodacious boobs, bountiful booty or mouth-watering thighs, gentlemen prefer curvy women over fashionable waifs. Now there's some science to back up this craving. And, yes, I said craving. Researchers at Georgia Gwinnett College and the University of Texas at Austin say that curvy women hit men's brains like a drug. Their study asked a group of men to look at photographs of women's naked bodies before and after plastic surgery. None of the women lost weight. Instead their fat had been redistributed to other places. Some essentially gained weight to become more curvy after surgery. MRI scans of the observers' brains when they looked at curvy women showed activity in the same reward centers activated by pleasurable drugs. The men were getting a kind of high from the experience.

Curves are the language everyone understands

Anthropologists have long known about the virtues of curves. Countless cross-cultural studies have shown that men prefer a low hip-to-waist ratio, no matter the body weight. In other words, small waists in relation to larger hips and breasts seem to be the ideal worldwide. Yes, 36-24-36 is a brick house in any language.

Everything in anthropology boils down to answering the question of why a particular trait was selected in evolution for reproductive success. Anthropologists speculate that curvy women signal health, reproductive fitness and youth. Ask any woman in menopause what body part is first to announce the closing of her baby factory, and she's likely to say, "My expanding middle." Women past child-bearing age tend to become less curvy. Now let's talk breasts. There are all kinds of theories as to why human females developed large frontal mammary glands. Some anthropologists say they grew as a kind of frontal derriere when we evolved from moving on all fours to walking upright. When our closest primate cousin, the chimpanzee, is ready to mate, she sports bright red lips on her back end. When we began walking on two feet, our upright hips closed the curtain on that show. Some scholars speculate that breasts grew to create a new show up front. Of course, that theory doesn't explain why so many women in parts of the world didn't grow breasts as large.

Telltale Curves

Another anthropologist speculates that large breasts that succumb to the gravity sag are also a telltale sign that women have reached a certain age and reproductive chances are waning. Of course, if this is true, the foundation garments of modern times and plastic surgery have disabled this signal. Today, men can easily be tricked by a good push-up bra. One other researcher suggests that curvy women are smarter and make smarter babies. Steven Gaulin from the University of California at Santa Barbara says that guys who choose women with chubby booties and thighs have a reproductive advantage. He believes that women's hips and thighs contain omega-3 fatty acids, which help nurture both mothers' and babies' brains during pregnancy. Yep. This dude thinks curvy women make smarter babies. Just sayin'.

Priya Rai Says Goodbye to Porn, Hello to Husband-to-Be

LOS ANGELES — Indian-born adult star Priya Rai has announced her retirement from porn, as well as her engagement to a business man working outside of the adult industry.

Rai said that her decision to leave the adult industry was completely of her own volition.

“I am so grateful for all the work and success I have had in this business and all the wonderful people I’ve worked with, but it is time for me to move ahead with my mainstream career and my personal life,” Rai said.

The now ex-adult starlet has a few mainstream projects lined up, including a Bollywood project and the lead role in Tom Kat Films’ “Isis Rising: Curse of the Lady Mummy,” co-produced with porn actor James Bartholet.

Rai addressed her fans: “To all of my fabulous fans, I say thank you so much and please look for me in my mainstream projects — you’ll love them.”

While Rai said she is excited to announce her engagement, she refuses to reveal intimate information about her mystery hubby and their relationship.

“I’ve met a very wonderful man, he is thoughtful and caring,” Rai said. “I know you all want details, but we want to keep our private life private. So, all I am going to say is that he is a very successful businessman and he is not in the industry.”

Rai was profiled for Hustler’s September 2013 issue, currently available at newsstands across the country. She also recently debuted a T-shirt design for Tit’s T-shirts.

Audrey Hollander Makes Erotic Fiction Debut

Porn star Audrey Hollander has joined forces with adult industry veteran Kelli Roberts for their collaborative erotic fiction debut, “Jingle My Bells.”

“I’ve wanted to try my hand at writing for a long time, so when my friend Kelli Roberts offered to team up and make my dream a reality, how could I say no?” Hollander said.

“We decided to start small [and] picked a themed book,” she continued. “I’ve always loved a good Christmas love story, so we started with that. Even though it’s not a big book, more a novella than an actual novel, it still took us a while to get it all together. It’s been a true labor of love and I’m so excited to finally release it to the world.”

The duo has released a synoptic teaser for the book: “Five years after the death of his wife, Cris nursed his pain and a beer, waiting for another holiday without her to be over. Then the evocative scent of a woman broke through his shield and changed this from a night to get through to a hot night he’ll never forget. Will Santa give them just one night of passion, or can a lonely guy and a porn star find the gift of something more?”

The book is available exclusively through Amazon. To view the trailer for the book, click here.

Roberts has previously penned and published erotic fiction, including “A Walk in the Woods” about a group of friends’ steamy RV camping trip.

Here is a short excerpt from “Jingle My Bells”....

Dad Arrested for Drugging Tween Daughter So He Could Assault Her Friend During Sleepover

A Connecticut widower and father of three has been accused of drugging his 12-year-old daughter so she'd go to sleep and he could have sex with her 12-year-old friend. The disgusting trick was discovered when the young girl's friends found text messages between her and the 42-year-old widower.

Robert Chesters was arrested for having a sexual relationship with his daughter's 12-year-old friend, which started after his daughter brought her friend home for a sleepover. According to court documents, Chesters reportedly texted to the young girl:

I am so lost without you :-([Blank] is gone next weekend And [daughter's name] will have Benadryl so you can lay with me comfortably and love me.

He also reportedly wrote:

When we made love last night your heart really showed through everything.

This guy genuinely thinks he's having some sort of love affair -- with a 12-year-old! He's 42!

When the girl's friends saw the messages, they reportedly told authorities at their middle school, who then called police. Chesters was charged with first-degree sexual assault charges and risk of injury to a minor.

He then tried to get the girl to clamp down on her friends, reportedly texting:

As a last resort tell them [daughter's name] will lose her dad for ten years if they say anything. No matter what happens I LOVE YOU.

You don't love a 12-year-old girl.

Cops apparently found Chesters unresponsive, sitting in his truck with a suicide note nearby. But he was still alive.

I understand a widower and father of three being lonely, but there are plenty of women out there are of legal age.

Man Nails Testicles To Red Square Cobblestones

A Russian performance artist was hospitalised Sunday after stripping naked and nailing his testicles to a Red Square cobblestone in protest against the Kremlin’s crackdown on political rights.

A video of the graphic action, available on Russian websites, showed artist Pyotr Pavlensky sitting naked outside Lenin’s Mausoleum being covered with a blanket by police officers while horrified passersby looked on.

The state-run RIA Novosti news agency said Pavlensky was taken to a police station after being treated in a central Moscow clinic.

The Saint Petersburg-based artist said in a statement posted on the Grani.ru website that he was trying to draw attention to Russian society’s inaction in the face of the development of a “police state”.

Russia marked its annual Police Day holiday on Sunday.

It is not the first time the 29-year-old has resorted to eye-watering methods of protest.

He has previously sewn his lips together to demonstrate against the jailing of two female members of the Pussy Riot punk band who staged an anti-Kremlin performance inside Moscow’s main cathedral in 2011.

He was also arrested after wrapping his naked body in barbed wire outside a Saint Petersburg government building in May.

BARKIN' OUT LOUD

In a stranger than whatever else happened to you moment this weekend, a discussion began to circulate around the country regarding a proposal of the Jerry Jones Affordable Cowboys Act.

Jones's approval rating has plummeted and most of the fans don't believe this team as presented can give them the sense of security they need for either an immediate offensive turn around or longer term defensive coverage.

The two sides of the NFL house, the NFC and AFC, are now both engaging in derisive comments toward the team President and a majority of personnel people are distancing themselves. The NFC has even begun to publicly admit the East division is so weak as to offer minimal fan satisfaction.

While calls for the GM and Head Coach to be replaced have gone unheeded, Jones has now himself announced his dissatisfaction with how this team has rolled out to the public.

The latest maneuver to reconcile with fans has the Cowboys offering to let season ticket holders maintain their status at current rates but with no guarantee's beyond this season. Ticket outlets have dropped all scalpers and have made no pledges to current or future buyers of any support or access to deals.

The Cowboys have sworn they're still capable of going on the offensive, yet candidly admit that there are some flaws in the system that have yet to be worked out, some are still unidentified but known to be causing problems.

Top honcho Jones's point man for all this, Coach Garrett, has recently stated that the team is in a great place and that everything they want is in front of them. Media immediately jumped on this stating that was true when they're behind all the leaders.

The Administration is now resorting to anonymous sources to release any information and to defend itself against accusations they sold a new system before it was ready.

There are six more weeks to see if the Jones Affordable Cowboys Act will pull through and fulfill its mission of helping fans to enjoy a winner, or if yet another curtain will fall on a failed campaign promise to keep his stadium filled.....Let's move on down the trail.

Bye weeks. Let me tell you, that sure means different things to different people. If you're team is average to top tier, you're looking for rest and recuperation. If not, well, if you're lucky and have a really good shrink you can use it to put your team way on the back mental burner.

The good teams take a bye to recoup and recover. The poor teams, like the Cowboys, are all going about trying to patch holes, fix schemes, repair bodies, and attempt damage control with the public. They also try to stay out of sight as long as they can.

In Texas it's a sad state of affairs when Waco has the best football team in the state. That's swell for Baylor but it sure makes what the Cowboys and Texans are putting on the field reek.

Did the Cowboys take advantage of their bye week? Honestly? Really? Just exactly what were they going to do to salvage this season? They could get some extra practice time in with the defensive secondary, ok. But that offense is what it is.

Dallas now faces the Giants, Raiders, Bears, Packers, Redskins, and Eagles. Worst case they take two and finish 7-9. With three it's 8-8, which Jones said was no longer acceptable. Four gives them 9-7, and just which four do you think they'd take?

Jones said in the off season there'd be some uncomfortable changes and he was right. However to most observers that what turned out to be uncomfortable wasn't exactly what they were lead to believe.

But let's be fair and ask this, can a mediocre team play above itself? Sure, look at the Cleveland Browns. And you can believe that this change isn't fair-weather, it'll carry over to next year and beyond. Why? The owner finally brought in some real football people and gave them the authority to make changes.

Teams that are mired in unsuccessful years are burdened with poor ownership and poorer all around decision makers. Lay that statement over all the poor teams out there and disagree with it if you can.

NHL

We haven't spent much time on hockey so far, heck, it's just in the early stages of the season, like a quarter of the way through, but we're fixin' to start crankin' things up.

Who's the surprise team right now? The Dallas Stars. They're 7-2-1 in the last ten and NO team in the Eastern conference is hotter and only three teams in the West are. After a slow start they've closed the gap and are only two games out of the top eight.

With roughly sixty games left if they can average 3-5 the rest of the way they'll be in and in with a good shot at advancing.

Is there better news? Yeah, this team is FUN to watch. And I mean truckloads of excitement. The top line is scoring and the down lines are contributing. Not only that, but you've got guys playing smart hockey. I mean guys who will drop the gloves aren't just doing it to square off, they're being smart about it. We've gotten on to the power play several times because they didn't retaliate.

Better defense, better puck control, more shots on goal, overall smarter play, and a level of enthusiasm that's like a pure shot of adrenaline for the fans.

This is NOT the fourth team in Dallas. I don't care if you've never watched a hockey game, you gotta zero in on this, it's the best game in the State of Texas right now.

NFL - Week 11 review

The good news: Dallas didn't play so you didn't have to suffer. The bad news, they're back this coming week.

People seem to be concerned about the Colts. Why? Because people believe they've shown a tendency to start slow and have to win late. My question? So what?

What they aren't noticing is that these teams that went up on them early aren't able to put them away and finish. Which says more about them, no?

The way the Bills creamed the Jets shows you rookie QB Smith is still a long way from being a NFL starter, and no, he's not going to be like Sanchez and take them to two consecutive AFC Conference games his first two years.

The Eagles have the top spot in the NFC East but they need to be worrying about the Giants. Like I’ve been saying, New York comes on late.

Yes, Denver won this round against KC, but in two weeks they get to travel to Arrowhead stadium and it’ll be a different game.

NFL Week 12

Bye week: Bengals, Bills, Eagles, and Seahawks

Thursday

Nobody expected this to be a bad game, but it is: Saints (8-2) at Falcons (2-8).

Sunday - Noon CST

Eight rolling down the ramp to you with only one baddie in the bunch, the rest all have importance and will be fought for. It doesn’t get much worse than this: Jags (1-9) at Texans (2-8).

The seven: Jet’s (5-5) at Ravens (4-6); Steelers (4-6) at Browns (4-6); Bucs (2-8) at Lions (6-4); Vikings (2-8) at Packers (5-5); Chargers (4-6) at Chiefs (9-1); Panthers (6-3) at Dolphins (5-5); and, Bears (6-4) at Rams (4-6).

Yes, people are going to argue with me that certain games just wouldn’t be important, like most or all of ‘em. But, there are trap games in here and standings. The NFC North is in a tight race and for the Chicago, Detroit, and Green Bay, a loss cuts deep.

KC is in a trap game with San Diego and can’t afford to fall two behind Denver. Carolina wants to challenge New Orleans but realistically is in a dogfight for a wild card. The AFC West controls one wild card so if the Jets want it they have to knock off Baltimore.

Yes, this is the time of the year where the good teams pull away and the infighting for the rest is where the dogs are getting after it.

3:30 CST

Three here, one a nose blow, one a desperation game, and one a win to stay in. Hanky time: Titans (4-6) at Raiders (4-6). Desperation: Cowboys (5-5) at Giants (4-6). Keep the lead: Colts (7-3) at Cardinals (6-4).

Tennessee is the “what if” team, like, IF their QB hadn’t gone down they’d be challenging. Dallas doesn’t have a secondary and the front can’t pressure QB’s. New York is again coming together late and believing in themselves. If the Cowboys win go stand on 34th Street, because miracles are being handed out early.

Indy wants a bye and Arizona wants a wild card. Colts need to develop the receiving unit, and the Cards have been winning under the radar. This pits Luck against his old OC, and you can bet Arizona has a better than even shot at winning this.

7:30 CST

Broncos (9-1) at Patriots (7-2). Who said the life of a football fan ain’t fun?

Monday Night Football

This could possible help the Cowboys in the NFC East race but who else would be interested: 49ers (6-4) at Redskins (3-7). San Francisco can’t take their division so this is a must win for a wild card.

Does Mack Brown keep his job? His laurels are turning rusty.
Bevo – Austin

Bevo:

I’m surprised to get email from an actual Longhorn, but hey, maybe it’s the grass they’re feeding you. And maybe mascots shouldn’t question their head coach. That said, I find it difficult to believe that Brown’s going to survive another year, which may be what was behind AD Dodds retiring so he didn’t have to do it.

TD

Two Dogs:

Why are so many games being scheduled in these so called neutral site arenas? I understand the OU/T game being held in Dallas, its closer for both sets of fans and they get a great turnout from both, but most of these other games are with locals and don’t have the same intensity. Last week two marquee games, 1Kentucky @ 2 Michigan St, and, 4Duke at 5Kansas were both held in Chicago. Four of the top five teams in the nation and both at the same neutral site. How much money would Chicago have had to offer the NCAAMB to get that? The fans were lousy. I mean LOUSY. They would cheer, sure, a bit, but it wasn’t like any home crowd going nuts. Taking teams away from home crowds and putting them in front of non-committed is stealing all the excitement away from college basketball.

Claudia – Louisville

Claudia:

I saw both games and you wrote my thoughts on it. Both top teams were “upset”, and that Michigan State victory over Kentucky (78-74) was a hell’uva game.
TD

Two Dogs:

Clippers star Blake Griffin is called a “fake” tough guy by other NBA players, any idea why?
Rick – Elko

Rick:

For some reason they think he’s soft, which is kind of ridiculous considering they fight less than MLB, who don’t fight at all. Part of it may be he’s just got one game, dunking, and has done less than minimal to improve his overall game. He’s close to being tied with Howard for least respected “star”.
TD

Two Dogs:

Do my Carolina Panthers have a legitimate shot at the playoffs this year, like I BE:LIEVE, or are critics ritght?
Mark – Charlotte

Mark:

The Panthers for now should be considered contenders for an NFC wild card. They can’t take their division (the Saints own that), the NFC East won’t offer a challenger, but the North and West have five competitors. Carolina may have to win out to get in, and that still might not be enough. I believe you have, and have had, one of the top defenses in the NFL, it’s the offense that’s your anchor. Your coach, Rivera, is very good.
TD

Two Dogs:

Jerry Jones is like a restaurant that used to be five star and now just looks good while robbing bellies. He’s like Detroit, a shell of what once was. He’s got a team with some good appetizers but the entrée is festering rot.
Mazine – Roanoke

Mazine:

Sorry I had to lop off the rest of your email, but I’m guessing the readers can fill in the rest of what you blithered on about.
TD

Two Dogs:

Can the Stars overtake the other sports and be Number one in Dallas? They keep messing up and they get opportunities.
Micah – Mesquite

Mesquite:

My opinion is they’re in second now. Except for that solid fan base that goes into Arlington, neither MLB nor the Rangers score consistently high on ratings. The Mav’s have consistently slid in popularity after Cuban and Nelson gutted the team. The Stars and their new owner are coming along very well and if you haven’t been watching you’re missing some good hockey and young players really starting to get into their own at the NHL level.

Legalization Wins Big on Election Night 2013

The movement to legalize and regulate adult marijuana use continued to gain momentum last night, as voters in four separate cities overwhelmingly approved citywide ballot measures eliminating criminal and civil penalties for adults who possess the plant.

Portland's Question 1 claimed victory on election night, making Portland the first city on the East Coast to legalize possession of up to 2.5 ounces of marijuana for adults over 21. Question 1 was approved by nearly 70% of the vote, with only around 30% voting in opposition.

"I'd like to thank NORML Communications Director Erik Altieri and the NORML organization as a whole for their efforts supporting our initiative to legalize marijuana in Portland," said Representative Diane Russell (D-Portland), "Together, NORML and our allies helped send a clear message to Maine and the nation that it is time for a new approach to marijuana. The overwhelming approval of Question 1 was a victory for science, common sense, and liberty."

In addition to Portland, three localities in Michigan (Ferndale, Jackson, and Lansing) all voted in support of marijuana legalization today by huge margins. The three areas had similar proposals to remove criminal and civil penalties for personal possession of up to 1 ounce of marijuana.

Ferndale won by the largest margin with 69.2% of voters approving the measure. Jackson approved their ordinance with 61% support and only 39% opposed and Lansing passed theirs with 63% support.

"These votes in Michigan, along with the resounding vote in Portland, Maine illustrate that not only are the American people considering moving towards legalization of marijuana, they overwhelmingly are demanding it," stated NORML Communications Director Erik Altieri, "Politicians must open their eyes to the political reality that legalization has arrived and is supported by a massive majority of voters. If they continue to drag their feet on the issue, we will take it to the people wherever possible, and we will win."

2014 is shaping up to be an even busier year for marijuana law reform than 2013, with statewide ballot measures being planned in several states and dozens of pieces of legislation being prepared for introduction. Help us keep up the momentum and fight onward toward legalization nationwide by joining NORML or making a donation today.

Together, we will legalize marijuana.

Federal: Legislation Introduced to Give Marijuana Business Access to Banking Services

Representatives Ed Perlmutter (CO-07) and Denny Heck (WA - 10), along with a bipartisan group of 16 other Republicans and Democrats, have introduced legislation that would reform federal banking laws relating to marijuana businesses. HR 2652: The Marijuana Business Access to Banking Act of 2013 updates federal banking rules to resolve conflicts between federal and state laws and would allow marijuana businesses acting in compliance with state law to access banking services.

Currently, under federal banking laws, many legal, regulated legitimate marijuana businesses that follow state law are prevented from opening bank accounts and operating as any other businesses would. They are therefore forced to operate as cash-only enterprises, inviting crime such as robbery and tax evasion and adding to the burden of setting up a legitimate small business.

"We need to address the public safety, crime and lost tax revenue associated when these legal and regulated businesses are operating in a cash-only system," said Congressman Ed Perlmutter (CO-07). "We also need to provide financial institutions assurance that they can make their own business decisions related to legal, financial transactions without fear of regulatory penalties or criminal prosecution."

"As a small business owner, I can't imagine trying to operate a legitimate business without access to the banking system. Forcing legitimate businesses to operate on a cash-only basis without bank accounts is an invitation for robbery, tax evasion and organized crime. With twenty-one states and D.C. now allowing for some form of legal adult marijuana usage, federal law needs to be updated to reflect the reality of the situation in the states," said Congressman Denny Heck (WA-10).

Contact your elected officials and urge them to support this legislation.

Subject: Support HR 2652, Allow Marijuana Businesses Access to Banking Services or go online to http://salsa3.salsalabs.com/o/51046/p/dia/action3/common/public/?action_KEY=12332

I urge you to support this legislation to promote public safety and fair treatment of businesses acting in accordance with their state's laws.

Most Offensive High School Mascots in the US

The Washington Redskins’ owner’s refusal to change the team’s offensive name may be getting a lot of national coverage these days, but the NFL team is far from the only one with a mascot problem. A California high school is currently in hot water over its own team name -- kids at Coachella Valley High School play and root for the “Arabs.” Not surprisingly, the name doesn’t sit well with the American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee, which has sent a letter requesting administrators do something about it. That would likely mean getting rid of the school’s angry looking mascot ... and the belly dancer who shows up at football games.

Can’t believe this exists in a high school in 2013? Just wait until you hear some of the other offensive team names American kids are playing under at high schools across the country.

Study: Why Do So Few People Use Wearable Tech?

It turns out that wearable tech might be scaring away our wallets, a recent study by market research group GfK suggests.

The research revealed that while 50 percent of those polled were aware of such products (including Google Glass, Samsung Galaxy Gear, Sony Smartwatch, Nike Fuelband, Pebble and Fitbit), only six percent of the general public actually owned one of them.

This information contrasted with the study’s other finding — that six in ten 16-24 year olds found the idea of a smartwatch appealing and four in ten of participants in that age group felt the same way about Google Glass.

One reporter at Mobile Entertainment proposed today that it may be the high price of the devices that has been deterring people from purchasing them.

Although not mentioned in the piece, the demographic most excited and most knowledgeable of the wearable tech renaissance — 16-24 year olds — are even less likely than their older cohorts to have enough dough to splurge on high-tech accoutrements.

Google Glass could set you back more than $1,000, and, although smartwatches run slightly cheaper — think $250-500 — they still might make your wallet do a double take.

GfK’s study shows that the populace at large hasn’t jumped on the wearable tech bandwagon yet, but some think it’s just a matter of time.

Stephen Yagielowicz, senior technology editor for XBIZ, wrote on a message board that early generations of the cell phone were also not popular right off the bat. As the technology improved, so did the mass appeal.

“Give it 10 or 20 years and we’ll be past wearables and talking about implants,” he wrote.

5 Scientific Reasons a Zombie Apocalypse Could Actually Happen

We found out recently that if you try to leave a little kid in a graveyard late at night, he'll freak out. Even if you offer to leave him a gun to protect himself. Why? It's because on some instinctual level, all humans know it's just a matter of time until the zombies show up.

Our culture is full of tales of the undead walking the Earth, from our religions to our comic books. But, some sort of zombie apocalypse isn't actually possible, right?

Right?

Guys?

Actually, yes.

It's quite possible. Here's five ways it could happen, according to science.

#5. Brain Parasites

Parasites that turn victims into mindless, zombie-like slaves are fairly common in nature. There's one called toxoplasmosis gondii that seems to devote its entire existence to being terrifying. This bug infects rats, but can only breed inside the intestines of a cat. The parasite knows it needs to get the rat inside the cat (yes, we realize this sounds like the beginning of the most fucked-up Dr. Seuss poem ever) so the parasite takes over the rat's freaking brain, and intentionally makes it scurry toward where the cats hang out. The rat is being programmed to get itself eaten, and it doesn't even know. Of course, those are just rats, right?

How it can result in zombies:

Hey, did we mention that half the human population on Earth is infected with toxoplasmosis, and don't know it? Hey, maybe you're one of them. Flip a coin. Oh, also, they've done studies and shown that the infected see a change in their personality and have a higher chance of going batshit insane.

Chances this could cause a zombie apocalypse:

Humans and rats aren't all that different; that's why they use them to test our drugs. All it takes is a more evolved version of toxoplasmosis, one that could do us what it does to the rats. So, imagine if half the world suddenly had no instinct for self-preservation or rational thought. Even less than they do now, we mean. If you're comforting yourself with the thought that it may take forever for such a parasite to evolve, you're forgetting about all the biological weapons programs around the world, intentionally weaponizing such bugs. You've got to wonder if the lab workers don't carry out their work under the unwitting command of the toxoplasmosis gondii already in their brains. If you don't want to sleep at night, that is. You may be protesting that technically these people have never been dead and thus don't fit the dictionary definition of "zombies," but we can assure you that the distinction won't matter a whole lot once these groaning hordes are clawing their way through your windows.

#4. Neurotoxins

There are certain kinds of poisons that slow your bodily functions to the point that you'll be considered dead, even to a doctor (okay, maybe not to a good doctor). The poison from fugu (Japanese blowfish) can do this. The victims can then be brought back under the effects of a drug like datura stramonium (or other chemicals called alkaloids) that leave them in a trance-like state with no memory, but still able to perform simple tasks like eating, sleeping, moaning and shambling around with their arms outstretched.

How it can result in zombies:

"Can?" How about "does." This stuff has happened in Haiti; that's where the word "zombie" comes from. There are books about it, the most famous ones by Dr. Wade Davis (Passage of Darkness and The Serpent and the Rainbow). Yes, the movie The Serpent and the Rainbow was based on this guy's actual science stuff. How much of it was fact? Well, there was that one scene where they strapped the guy naked to a chair and drove a huge spike through his balls. We're hoping that part wasn't true. What is definitely true is the story of Clairvius Narcisse. He was a Haitian guy who was declared dead by two doctors and buried in 1962. They found him wandering around the village 18 years later. It turned out the local voodoo priests had been using naturally occurring chemicals to basically zombify people and putting them to work on the sugar plantations (no, really). So, the next time you're pouring a little packet of sugar into your coffee, remember that it may have been handled by a zombie at some point.

Chances this could cause a zombie apocalypse:

On the one hand, it's already fucking happened! So that earns it some street cred right off the bat. But, even if some evil genius intentionally distributed alkaloid toxins to a population to turn them into a shambling, mindless horde, there is no way to make these zombies aggressive or cannibalistic. Yet.

#3. The Real Rage Virus

In the movie, 28 Days Later, it was a virus that turned human beings into mindless killing machines. In real life, we have a series of brain disorders that do the same thing. They were never contagious, of course. Then, Mad Cow Disease came along. It attacks the cow's spinal cord and brain, turning it into a stumbling, mindless attack cow. And, when humans eat the meat ...

How it can result in zombies:

When Mad Cow gets in humans, they call it Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease. Check out the symptoms:

Lack of coordination (for example, stumbling and falling)

Muscle twitching

Myoclonic jerks or seizures

Rapidly developing delirium or dementia

Sure, the disease is rare (though maybe not as rare as we think) and the afflicted aren't known to chase after people in murderous mobs. Yet. But, it proves widespread brain infections of the Rage variety are just a matter of waiting for the right disease to come along.

Chances this could cause a zombie apocalypse:

If the whole sudden, mindless violence idea seems far-fetched, remember that you are just one brain chemical (serotonin) away from turning into a mindless killing machine (they've tested it by putting rats in Deathmatch-style cages and watching them turn on each other). All it would take is a disease that destroys the brain's ability to absorb that one chemical and suddenly it's a real-world 28 Days Later. So, imagine such an evolved disease, which we'll call Super Mad Cow (or, Madder Cow) getting a foothold through the food supply. Say this disease spreads through blood-on-blood contact, or saliva-on-blood contact. Now you have a Rage-type virus that can be transmitted with a bite. Just like the movie. With one bite, you're suddenly the worst kind of zombie: A fast zombie.

#2. Neurogenesis

You know all that conversy out there about stem cell research? Well, the whole thing with stem cells is that they can basically be used to regenerate dead cells. Particularly of interest to zombologists like ourselves is neurogenesis, the method by which they can re-grow dead brain tissue. You can see where this is going.

How it can result in zombies:

You wanted the undead to make an appearance in this article? Well, here you go, you creepy bastards. Science can pretty much save you from anything but brain death; they can swap out organs but when the brain turns to mush, you're gone. Right? Well, not for long. They're already able to re-grow the brains of comatose head trauma patients until they wake up and walk around again. Couple that with the new ability to keep a dead body in a state of suspended animation so that it can be brought back to life later, and soon we'll be able to bring back the dead, as long as we get to them quickly enough. That sounds great, right? Well, this lab dedicated to "reanimation research" (yes, that's what they call it) explains how the process of "reanimating" a person creates a problem. It causes the brain to die off from the outside in. The outside being the cortex, the nice part of you that makes humans human. That just leaves the part that controls basic motor function and primitive instincts behind. You don't need the cortex to survive; all you need is the stem and you'll still be able to mindlessly walk and eat and enjoy Grey's Anatomy. This is how chickens can keep walking around after they've been beheaded (including one case where the chicken lived for 18 months without a head). So, you take a brain dead patient, use these techniques to re-grow the brain stem, and you now have a mindless body shambling around, no thoughts and no personality, nothing but a cloud of base instincts and impulses. That, ladies and gentlemen, is what we like to call a real, live, undead fucking zombie. So there.

Chances this could cause a zombie apocalypse:

Think about it. Under every legal system in the world, all rights and responsibilities are terminated at death. All it takes is someone with resources and a need for a mindless workforce of totally obedient slave labor. How long until somebody tries this? We're betting somebody in the world, maybe North Korea, will have a working zombie by Christmas.

#1. Nanobots

Nanobots are a technology that science apparently engineered to make you terrified of the future. We're talking about microscopic, self-replicating robots that can invisibly build--or destroy--anything. Vast sums of money are being poured into nanotechnology. Sure, at some level scientists know nanobots will destroy mankind. They just can't resist seeing how it happens.

How it can result in zombies:

Scientists have already created a nano-cyborg, by fusing a tiny silicone chip to a virus. The first thing they found out is these cyborgs can still operate for up to a month after the death of the host. Notice how nano scientists went right for zombification, even at this early stage. They know where the horror is. According to studies, within a decade they'll have nanobots that can crawl inside your brain and set up neural connections to replace damaged ones.

That's right; the nanobots will be able to rewire your thoughts. What could possibly go wrong?

Chances this could cause a zombie apocalypse:

Do the math, people. Some day there will be nanobots in your brain. Those nanobots will be programmed to keep functioning after you die. They can form their own neural pathways, meaning they can use your brain to keep operating your limbs after you've deceased and, presumably, right up until you rot to pieces in mid-stride. The nanobots will be programmed to self-replicate, and the death of the host will mean the end of the nanobots. To preserve themselves, they'd need to transfer to a new host. Therefore, the last act of the nanobot zombie would be to bite a hole in a healthy victim, letting the nanobots steam in and set up camp in the new host. Once in, they can shut down the part of the brain that resists (the cortex) and leave the brain stem intact. They will have added a new member to the unholy army of the undead.

Now, it should be more than clear by this point that our goal is to be responsible researchers. We don't want to create a panic here. All we're saying is that on an actual day on the actual calendar in the future, runaway microscopic nanobots will end civilization by flooding the planet with the cannibalistic undead.

Science has proven it.
